The space we are looking for is a forest...

A reading place from perception...

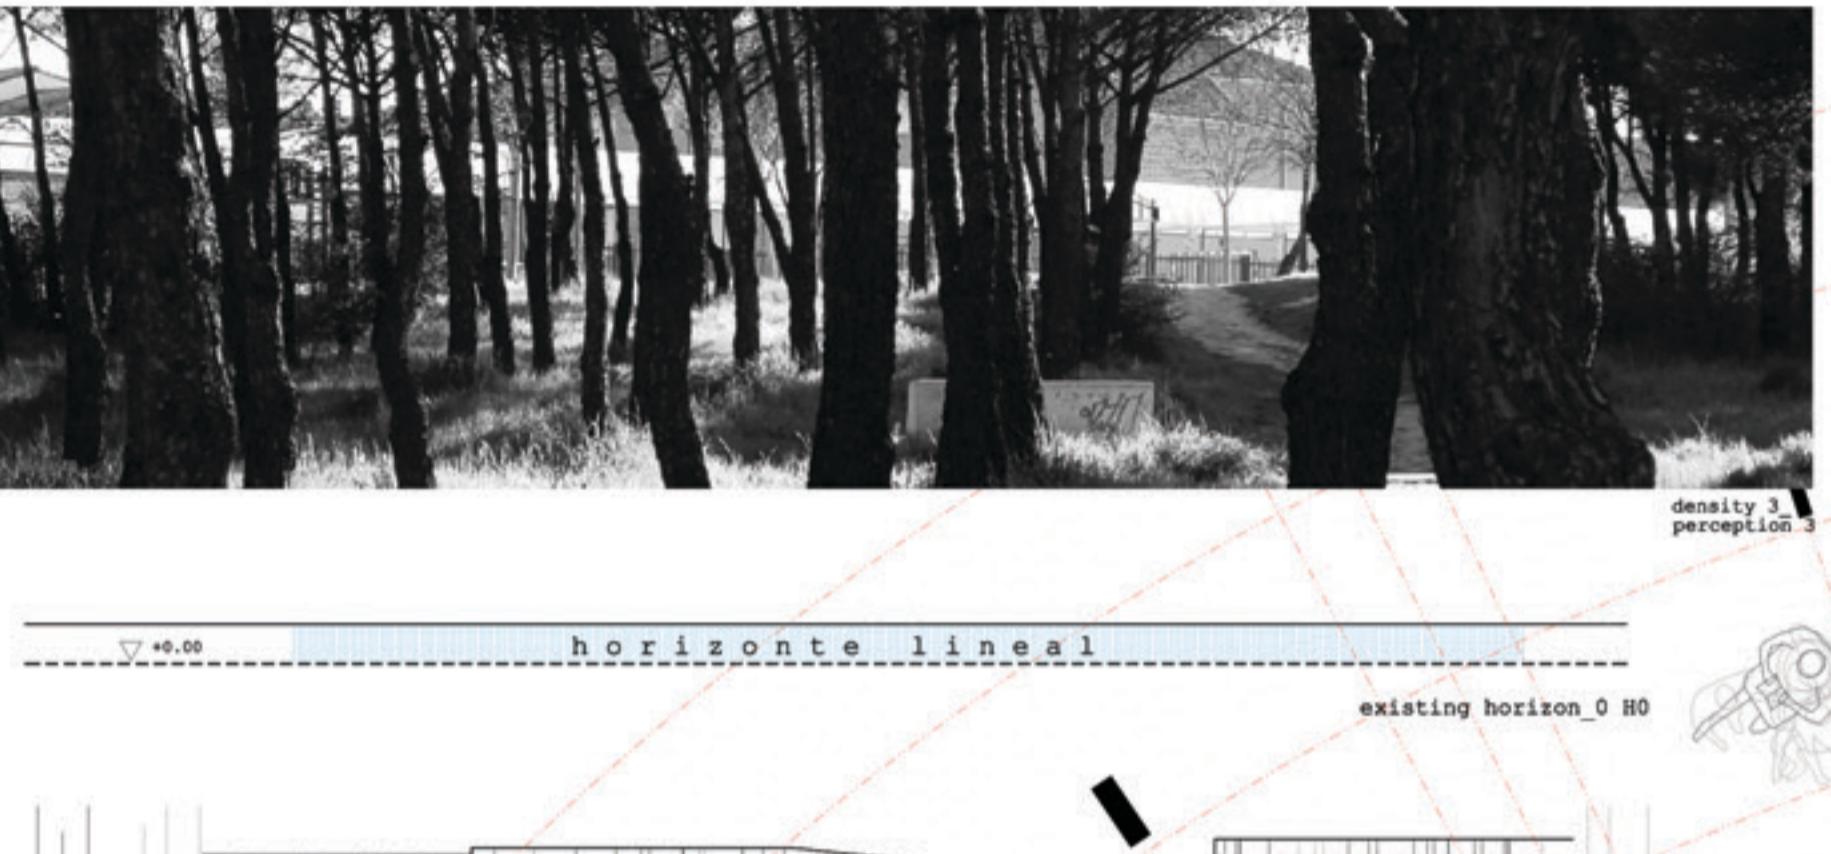

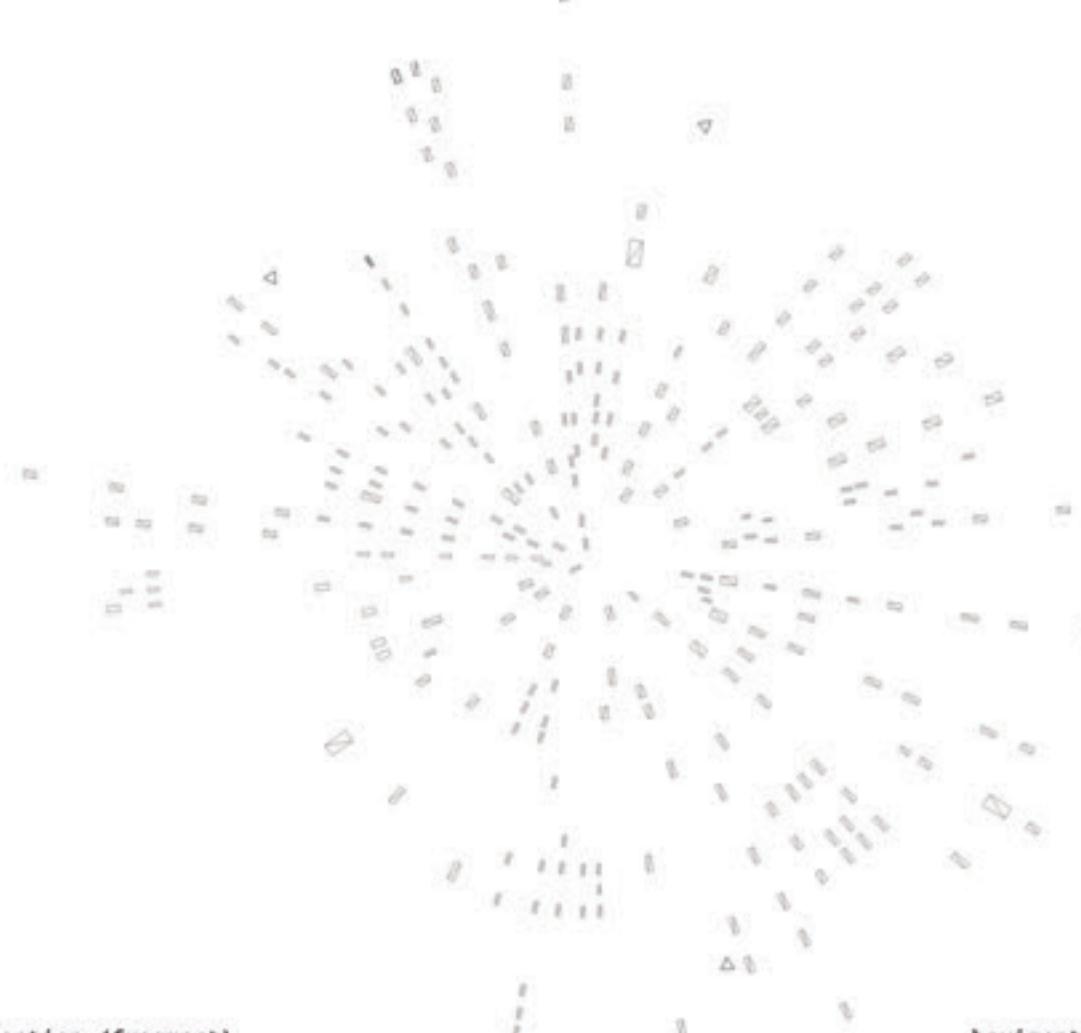

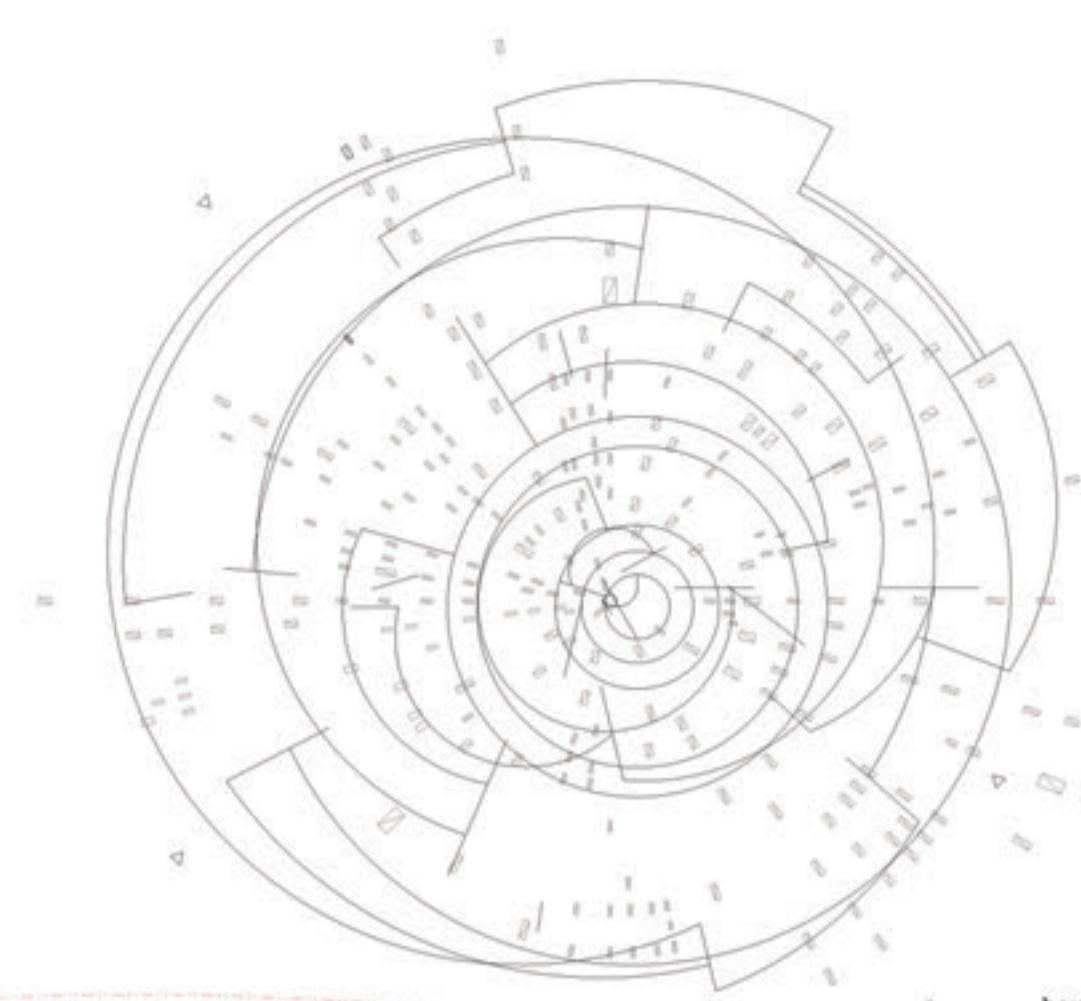

Reading is an individual act

We read at the top of the landscape, built with light trees, under the trees. We work with the space that a tree generate around it, its sphere. The tree connected to other trees offers the privacy that the act of reading needs. An stricited relation between the person, the book and what surrounds them. A new continuous landscape full of light columns that organice the space. The columns will conform the game of look and not being looked, allowing the individuality the act of reading needs. The topography organices spacially the reading place. The structure reconstructs the forest...
